Dickens' Last Reading

From Youths' Companion. I was a young girl in the school room when my father told me he was going to take me up to London to hear Charles Dickens read from his own works. I do not know why I was chosen rather than the elders of the family, but chosen I was, and we traveled up together from our country home, and dined at a restaurant, that we might take our place in good time at St. James' Hall. The seats cost a guinea apiece. I was overwheimed at the thought of papa spending such a sum on me. It weighed upon me. Present ly I blurted out my thanks for his generosity. He laughed and said: "This is a great occasion; it is something for you to tell your grandchildren fifty years hence." suffocation. Suddenly there came a great sunocation. Suddenly there came a great hush, and Charles Dtckens' slim, gentlemanly figure, in his evening dress, with his favorite can ellia in his buttonhole, appeared on the dais. He bowed and bowed repeatedly, and the audience—the guinea sudience—toared and cheered like plowmen for quite five minutes. He seemed pleased but year, weary and frail and he did not for quite five minutes. He seemed pleased but very weary and frail, and he did not attempt to speak until, at last, the noise quite subsided. Then his voice at first sounded thin and boyish, but later it grew more powerful and fuller of feeling.

more powerful and fuller of feeling.

He read the "Christmas Carol" and selections from "Pickwick." It was rather a dramatic recitation than a reading, for he geemed to know it all by heart, and looked far away down the hall and seldom at his book. The audience, too, knew the pieces well, and often roared out the end of a sentence before he had time to pronounce it. As we came away people in the crowd were saying how fatigued and worn Mr. Dickens looked, and I believe he was not able to fulfill his next engagement, so that this was literally his last, or last but one, public appearance. It was in March or public appearance. It was in March or April, 1870, and he died on June 9 of that NO NERVES QUARING.

THREE DEGREES LESS

Not Quite as Hot Today as It Was Yesterday.

WEATHER BUREAU MAKES NO PROMISES

This is the Month When Predictions Are Unsafe.

THE STORM IN CANADA

It is not as hot today as it was yesterday by about three degrees. But it is hot enough for all the purposes of mankind. It is ho make men disagreeable, and women fretty, and children peevish, and dogs dangerous, and soda fountains popular, and laundres profitable, and breezes welcome. It is hot enough to make the folks at the weather bureau wonder how they can appease the wrath of those who placed faith in the promise officially given yesterday that relief would probably come to the District this evening.

That relief is not in sight. To be sure as just stated, it is not quite as hot as it was, but a difference of but three degrees was, but a difference of but three degrees does not mean much to a weary community, ready to drop for sheer exhaustion from the intense heat. Five degrees at the other side of the thermometer, however, would make a tremendous amount of difference. It would change life into mere existence and endurance into madness. That is where the difference comes in.

Yesterday's Storm a Fluke.

The great storm that gathered in the western skies early yesterday afternoon was a tantalizing fluke. It gave Alexandria a good shaking up and raised the hopes of Washingtonians, but as it went sailing off to the south and gave down only a few drops of welcome moisture, the hearts of the people fell. In the evening hearts of the people fell. In the evening there was another disappointment, as clouds gathered in the west and then scattered, and all hope of a good rain was gone. The weather map shows that the "low" that gathered a day or so ago is determined to take a far northern course that may mean a postponement of the drenching that this section of the country needs so hadly

Just now the storm is centered at the extreme edge of the United States, and it is only a slim chance that it may turn sud-ucrly in its course and swoop southward; or a secondary storm may form in the Gerly in its course and swoop southward; or a secondary storm may form in the southwest, in the trough of the first one, and come careening eastward with a trail of moisture and cold air following it.

Walking on the avenue was not such a dreadful task today as it was yesterday. It was comparatively safe to cross the asphalted street without being reduced to gas or stuck fast in the soft pavement. Therefore, it is hoped that sleep will be possible tonight. Not the New Temperatures.

When it was found that the official records of the thermometer yesterday exceeded the average of a large number of instruments in the business part of town the hought came that perhaps the bureau had begun to publish what Prof. Moore, the new begun to publish what Prof. Moore, the new end of the institution, calls "sensible temperatures." It was suspected that the bureau was trying to close the gap that has so long been supposed to exist between the official temperatures and those experienced by down-town folks. But this morning a star reporter was assured that this was not the case, but that the 96-degree record was official and absolute, and that the new wrinkle of publishing the sensible temperatures would not go into effect until the first of October.

And as to promises—why, the bureau And as to promises—why, the bureau wisely makes none. Weather promises in September are like the proverbial pie crust.

weeks, without a death or divorce intervenirg, is a record of which any girl with a matrimonial turn of mind might well be proud. That is the record that Miss Maude Lilly has carned for herself, and the story of her experiences, as it came out in court today, is a most remarkable one.

Miss Lilly, or Mrs. Goodman, or Mrs. Crosby, hails from Pottsville, Pa., but she has relatives in this city, and has spent considerable time here. About a year ago she accepted an offer of marriage from a young man who lives in Washington by the name of George W. Crosby. Her mother did not approve of the match and urged her to plight her troth to Mr. John V.Goodman, who was a Pottsville man and better known to her. But Maude loved George known to her. But Maude loved George better, and would not. For a year past she has corresponded regularly with Crosby and all was going well.

Mrs. Lilly's opposition to the marriage continued firm, and there was little chance of her relenting, so Maude finally gave in. The result was that on August 2, 1895, she was lawfully married to Mr. Goodman by a minister in Camden, N. J. He Grew Fonder.

But this did not stem the tide of affection for Mr. Crosby, and she continued to write affectionate letters to him without letting drop a hint of her shy at matrimony. After her marriage she went to live with her husband on Franklin street, Philadelphia, and all went well.

But in the meantinue absence made Crosby's heart grow fonder, and he began to think that it was time for him to get married. The result was that a few days ago he went over to Philadelphia to get his bride and found her living there in comfortable style. She said nothing about having been married already, and as Mr. Goodman was off at his day's work at the time the other man had no suspicion that he had a rival—a married rival at that, and already married to his fiancee.

Married Again.

Mr. Crosby suggested to the girl that they come on to Washington and get married, without any more delay, and to this she agreed at once. She stopped only long erough to pick up an excuse for a trousseau and to write a note to her husband. It this she told him that she was coming or to Washington for a couple of weeks' visit, after which she would return to him. She also told him where to board in the freentime, so that she might find him when she got back. Day before vesterday shortshe got back. There was a meeting of the trio, which resulted in Crosby swearing out a warrant before Clerk Potts of the Police Court, charging the young woman with the serious offense of bigamy.

gible as a witness. After hearing this remarkable story Judge Kimball ordered the young woman to be held for the action of the grand jury. Bond was fixed in the sum of $500.

Does Not See It. Miss Lilly, as she is called in the informa tion, is twenty-one years of age, and while she is not exactly a beauty, she is not very far from it, and her general appearance is decidedly attractive. In court this morning she wore a black serge skirt, a pink and white striped shirt waist and a summer straw hat, covered with roses.

The two young men are both well-dressed, nice-looking fellows, neither of them over thirty years of age. Goodman is a steamthirty years of age. Goodman is a steam ov profession and gets good wages from a big Philadelphia co clever stairbuilder and lives at 608 E

The most curious feature in the case is the fact that the young woman does not seem to realize that she has done anything seem to realize that she has done anything unusual or at all out of the way. In conversation with a Star reporter, after the hearing, she said that she supposed she would have to suffer the full penalty of the law, but she thought that it was a good deal of a hardship.

"Why," said she, in a most unconcerned manner, "mamma wanted me to marry Mr. Goodman and I wanted to marry Mr. Creeky. Things become rather unconfort.

Mr. Goodman and I wanted to marry Mr. Cresby. Things became rather uncomfortable, and so I thought the best way out of it was to marry the man mamma wanted me to first, and then marry the man I wanted afterward. The young woman was afterward given a seat in the narrow hallway by the cells back of the court room, and here she and her husbands had a long whispered conference, in which they still acted like the best of friends. At the conclusion of the talk Goodman and Crosby went off together. Crosby said that he would endeavor to secure bonds for the woman, as he did not wish to have her stay in fail until her trial. Goodman could not help him in this, as he is a stranger in town. When asked if he would apply for a divorce, Mr. Goodman said that he had not yet made up his mind. SERIOUS COMPLAINT. Officer Creagh Will Have to Answe

Some Charges.

Mrs. Laura Thompson, who lives at 440 New Jersey avenue, was at the Commis sioners' office this morning for the purpose of entering a complaint against cer Creagh of the sixth precinct. According to her statement, Creagh came to her house some time ago while her husband was in New York and knocked at the door. It was 2 o'clock in the morning, and not knowing who it was, she opened the door and found Creagh with his partner. They pushed in the door, and she told them to go away at once, that she was a respecting to her house that time of night. Officer Creagh's partner begged her to let them Creagh's partner begged her to let them out the back door, because the inspector might be in front. This she refused to do, adding that as they had come in the front door they would have to depart the same way. The partner plead so hard she finally consented to go outside and see if the inspector was there. The next day she was going to report the men, but friends pleaded so hard she did not do so. Ever since then Officer Creagh, she says, has been pursuing her, and has arrested her boy Willie for doing nothing. Last night he was arrested for standing on the street, and this morning, rather than appear in

The Garbage Situation. Next Monday morning the Commission rs will give a hearing to Contractor Warfield, and then and there decide what sys tem or systems of cremation for garbage disposal will be acceptacle to them. They will order the contractor to forthwith proceed with the erection of the plants and push their construction as rapidly as possitime, but the Commissioners for some un-explained reason held the matter up. There is little doubt that the Smith system will be insicted upon by the Commissioners, and if two plants are decided upon they will allow the contractor to name the other sys-tem. He has already stated his preference for the Brown system.

A HORSE MIND READER

An Expert Trainer Says That Horses From the Agriculturist.

"Horses are almost as superstitious a men, but, unlike men, they can be reasoned thinking philosophers. The horse is the noblest animal that walks the earth. He has most of the good traits of the human race, with some of the bad ones." It was Prof. Bartholomew who spoke in this exalted strain about the horse

"When a youth I was a cowboy, and one of the rough riders of the west. Like other cowboys, I delighted in a bucking broncho but I soon learned that the wildest borse can be tamed in an hour so that he will follow his rider about and let himself be ridden without a struggle. I have tamed hundreds of horses fresh from the prairies, and never failed to make a complete conquest in a short time. I treat horses as intelligent beings, and after a manner ask them if they can do things. Often they refuse and cogain they say as placing as if fuse, and again they say as plainly as if they used words: Why, yes, I can do that, and they do it.

"I train my horses in classes. I take a dozen and ask each to do a certain thing. Some will start blindly, while others will step up briskly and say, 'Yes, I can do that.' Then I ask them to do something else, and then those who are quickest at first will halt, while those who made no response before are anxious to do the thing. Thus I soon learn the class of work each is especially fitted for, and develop them along their special lines. In this way they are just like men. Now, I have tried numerous ways to make a living outside of horses, but always fail and drift back to my hobby.

"Horses are like men in the amount of courage they can muster up. If I want a horse to do extra long jumps, I select a creature that is finely built and has all the physical qualities, but perhaps he is a coward and afraid to leap. Some little, half-days lead a control of the course of the c developed creature possessed with a dare-devil spirit may outdo him in every re-spect."

The Owners Fell Out. "For sale or charter-largest steam yacht Behind it is a story of a syndicate yachting trip of English noblemen to th Fjords of Norway, a falling out among the Fjords of Norway, a falling out among the members of the party while in Norwegian waters, the abandonment of the trip, the sending of the yacht back to Liverpool and the return home by various routes of those who started out as one family. The yacht is the City of Richmond, formerly an Inman liner employed in the trans-Atlantic service. She is of steel, 480 feet long, nearly 60 feet beam and draws 26 feet of water. From the Philadelphia Record. "It's safe to pay that a basketful of finger rings are lost at the seashore every season," said a habitue of the Atlantic coast summer resorts recently. bathers never think to remove their rings from their fingers before taking a plunge n the surf, and when they come out, not a few find that the rings have slipped of in the water. Of course, they are irre-vocably lost in the sands. If the beach at Atlantic City, for instance, could be thrashed out or sifted, it would yield a gold mine, not to mention a valuable store of precious stones of every kind."
